through leadership feedback.

Managing in a more complex world

Organisations need to adapt, not just to survive, but to thrive in today’s business world. Across every sector, volatility, uncertainty, complexity, and ambiguity (VUCA) means management needs to focus on developing employees and leaders with the right skills and attributes to build successful teams. Failure to nurture the right leaders at all levels and organisations will become irrelevant, less profitable, and unable to attract or retain top talent.

64% of CEOs said developing next gen leaders was one of their top 10 challenges

- Global Leadership Challenges 2018¹

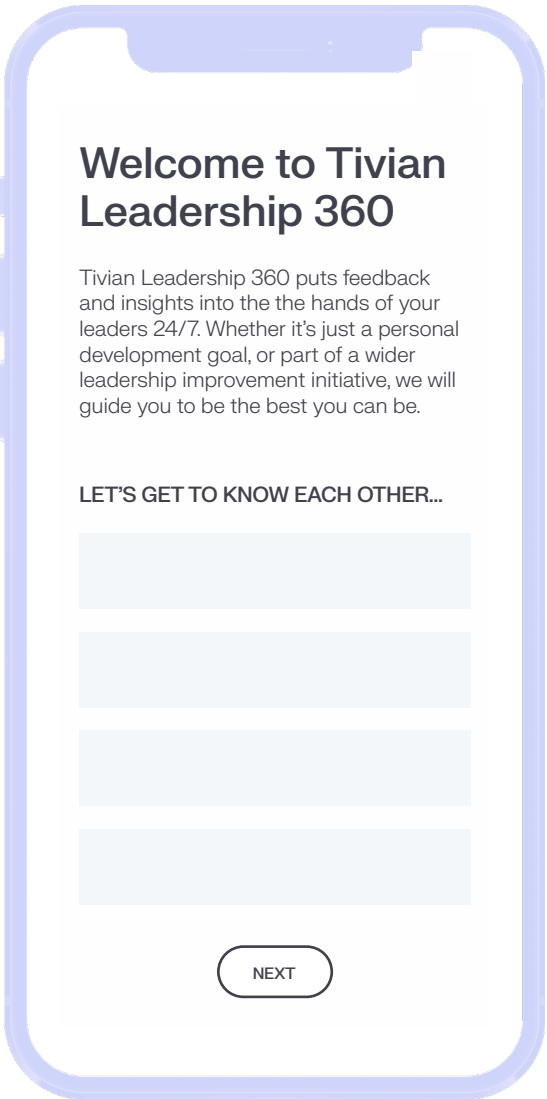

80% of respondents rated leadership as a high priority, but just 41% think their organisations are ready to meet their leadership requirements.

Developing leaders at all levels

Feedback is critical to developing high-performing leaders. It highlights individual progress, identifies areas for improvement, uncovers blind spots in skills, and measures training effectiveness. However, traditional 360-degree methods of collecting leadership feedback are resource and time-intensive, meaning that HR teams have to prioritise their activities on a narrow group of higher-level executives. In these settings, feedback is centralised and calendar-driven, not open to all, not democratised, and not on-demand. This stifles the opportunities to develop and progress.

At the same time, employees want to develop; fail to invest in their careers and they'll leave, increasing skills shortages and holding back transformation. Research backs this up. For example, 44% of employees felt that their company doesn't sufficiently value their development.

Old-style approaches may suit hierarchical organisations, but don't deliver in today's dispersed, project-based businesses as they embrace modern ways of working. With senior management focused on leadership development, HR has to transform its methods to meet the needs of a rapidly changing business world.

Driving Cultural change through Feedback

TRANSFORM LEADERSHIP CULTURE THROUGH FEEDBACK - RAG

RAG AG is Germany's largest coal mining corporation, but has been downsizing since 2007 to meet government goals to end mining in the country, a process that finished in 2018.

It uses Tivian software to collect and analyse leadership development and evaluation feedback. This aims to answer two key questions:

1. How can individual examples of good leadership and communication be identified and rewarded?
2. How are general organisational and leadership strengths and weaknesses derived from these results, and used to create an integrated organisational development strategy?

That was a real challenge in a large enterprise which employed over 40,000 people. Since RAG began collecting and acting on leadership feedback with the help of Tivian a fundamental change in leadership culture has been achieved. Thanks to feedback and dialogue, and the organisational development measures taken as a result, RAG has successfully decoupled the organisational and performance environment from the company's challenging circumstances.
